Anatalia Vallez: Two Poems

Anatalia Vallez · Tuesday, September 6th, 2022

there's a traffic jam in my brain a helicopter searching for answers late at night seagulls with oil stuck between their feathers I don't know how to help them fly it all just gets louder as the days go by overwhelmed about which accident to pay attention to and why there is construction happening in the middle of the day I haven't moved in days but in my dreams I'm catching a train

I don't make it to the tracks and if I do, I'm on the wrong side the train just passes by I wake up to a strange alarm and sigh

today I made it out of the house walked for miles until the falcon who had been waking me up told me where to take the train so I could avoid the traffic jam in my brain

missing you

I hope the next time I see you
I am able to hug you
Just a bit longer
Either with my eyes
Or my arms
And celebrate that we lived to see another day
On this beautiful, watery planet
During one of the toughest times in recent history

How you are choosing to cope Is not where my attention will be Whether you flirt with a song

Cry watching reruns

Break down after work

Flip off or on the news 24/7

Respond only with memes

Keep me on read

I forgive you

I've abandoned myself too before

This new day holds something more

Within this empty container

The capacity to have compassion for one another

To carry justice and love offerings

To ensure a better world than the one we were born into

When I was little I used to get scared that

My imagination would swallow me whole

Now I've come to terms that this may just be one big dream

In which case, I dreamt you

Dreamt the rain that washed the guava off the pavement

Dreamt the sun that eases our sorrows and dries our tears

In which case, there is more to dream

More to be

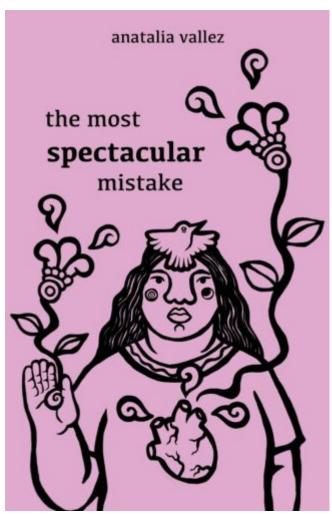

More to give, to co-create

And if for whatever reason,

I don't get to see you again

Receive this poem and every poem I've ever written

As an embrace
