Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Janice Lee: Three Poems

Janice Lee · Wednesday, February 12th, 2020

?? or GHOST

from Separation Anxiety

we exist in relation to—or, we shuddered
as forever stared back our demons think something has gone
??, gone
layered on thin
once we lost it all forever even as we trained ourselves to need the animal
less
no need to gaze softly
even if you are going to be cutting it all down

*

a cavitation speaks too with the susurrations of what we call compensation

in a prophecy:

thousands of sheep and goats and camels and oxen and sons and daughters thousands upon thousands bleeding in the dead of night

in a prophecy:

my head is split open with an axe and the deterioration of mind that was inevitable from the get-go finally finishes its course

in a prophecy:

the ghost of my dead mother eavesdropping as I sob willfully / woefully because I am so afraid to be alone that I bully everyone close to me into caring more about themselves than about the world whose cruel test of faith is all of this?

*

find yourself laying down the beautiful melancholy of language is tempting but you know already to turn away once in awhile
and take a step in the opposite direction you know already to laugh after the tears
but how?

with the redaction of knowing with all you will ever be a steady stone that enacts the performance of becoming
becoming
becoming
and when Benny shifts on the floor breathes deeply that too is the gesture of an entire life endearing
its ghosts still reaching still: the darkness of light

God

when will we learn/unlearn it all?

This entry was posted on Wednesday, February 12th, 2020 at 10:43 am and is filed under Poetry You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments (RSS) feed. You can skip to the end and leave a response. Pinging is currently not allowed.