The Only Good Thing About Death

is the death of something bad: it is no surprise my neighbor's wives prayed for the death of their husband's drunk smiles. some people said some people killed some people, instead some informed people said good people killed the bad ones the way death kills the next one in its everlasting list. nothing is more beautiful than living until the life in the afterlife is sky-censored of free will to laugh at jokes, to sleep at the break of day after breakfasting, to air one's voice so loud in joy of getting things done, to love without heartbreaking. nothing is more beautiful than living until death makes us regret, out of happiness, living at all. nothing is more miserable than leaving without getting to say goodbye until the leaving becomes the outlet of things so precious we never had.
the death of something bad is the only good thing about death so, in my daily prayer, i open my purest mind into existence to make me leave tomorrow as if, in everyone's mind, i never live enough.
