

Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Lauren K. Carlson: Three Poems

Lauren Carlson · Sunday, August 14th, 2022

Narrow Fellow In The Grass

Confidence looks strange on a woman/ like a boa constrictor/ in the swamps of South America I saw one in a cage/ I did not shiver/ at the snake/ no narrow fellow was he/ but girthed like me/round patterned flickering thing/ tone/ twisting into yet another/ spiral/ yet another/ strange tail extending/ that's me/ road-show-zoo-circus-beast/ again/ like me/ unusual isn't it/ most of the books I read/ the man is always older/ I tell you he thinks he is/ but never is/ older than me/ little girl the old woman said but I am/ little no longer/ I'm a boa'd thing/ scarf you'd hang with/ I guarantee/ nobody believes my age when I say it/ nobody believes how old / I am you see/ they say/ no way/ you are so beautiful/ they say it to my face/ a waste a beauty like that/ at her age/heaven forbid/ I'm sure you've heard the story/ I was once a snake/ with legs

*

Wrecked

Love like pine sap. Sticky in the wrong places.
Bob Daniels sold his family home in Manistee,
guess you never know what'll bend someone's nose.
We could save humanity if we evaporated humans.
The bearded iris bloomed today.
How dare she — doesn't she know we're suffering?
Selfish flower whose true age is uncertainty,
Mr. Daniels never sold his home to anyone.
To unlock my ancient parts I camped for a week at the bottom of Lake Michigan. I breathed such freshwater. I never told how. Unreal fabric, sea floor, which swaddles all of us: jeweled maggots.
If we only knew ourselves grub and wholly.
Like ruby throated wings, the clear water of time humming.
Hands at the wheel, teenage girl. We all wanna dance with somebody.

—Waxwing Oct 2021

*

Summer Solstice In Lac Qui Parle

Now, at sunset, the children's faces part the light
 and take on darkened cloaks, so for a moment, though prairie wind animates brush
 and crests its grasses, while tractors
 roar through the fields, causing dust to hover holy ghost like over the surface of the shivering deep loam as controlled burns
 singe the invading sunflower edge-weeds
 and we protect our cultivated soy crop,
 everything is foreshadowed with reflexive clarity. The old ground will crumble under cull and engine.
 Rise and make a cloudless red stinging sky. What would it mean to unimagine, unimagine, no, not being, but desire;
 to unimagine desire.
 Conduit to dissatisfaction,
 my life is what else.

—LEON Literary Review Oct 2021

*

ANIMALS I HAVE KILLED by Lauren

K. Carlson

Click here to find out more about Lauren K. Carlson and her publications

This entry was posted on Sunday, August 14th, 2022 at 7:15 pm and is filed under Poetry

You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments \(RSS\) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.