Safety Always Comes First: Safe Clothes for a Baby

Our Friends · Wednesday, February 26th, 2020

The abundance of clothes for babies is impressive these days. Almost every brand presents collections with outfits for little fashionistas. There is the possibility to create cute family looks, as well as dress a child in the outfits that are exactly the same for adults. However, in all this rush for stylish looks of kids, it is essential to remember basic safety rules that are sometimes disregarded while the clothes are chosen.

The first and undeniable rule is the quality of materials. There are still lots of so-called brands that sell synthetic clothes for children. The exception is outer garments that have to be warm, water- and wind-resistant. All the clothes that are in contact with the skin, especially those for summer like baby girl or baby boy rompers, onesies, and bodysuits, have to be made from natural fabrics.

The quality of dyes and prints also matters. The chemicals used for different colors can be too aggressive and cause irritation of the skin or allergy. That is why before dressing a child, wash a new outfit with hands in warm water so that to understand the quality of dyeing. If water changes its color, the skin of a baby will be exposed to these chemicals. As for the patterns, remember to check if they are reliably applied. Otherwise, a child can tear a piece off and swallow.

When it comes to washing, particular attention should be paid to the quality of a powder or detergent. Make sure that it does not cause allergy or other reactions.

More Precautions in the Choice of Baby Outfits

1. For newborns, clothes have to be as simple as possible. Seams have to be made at the outside, labels should be better absent at all. Forget about cute accessories like headbands. The only exception is the look for a photoshoot or when a child is under permanent control.
2. Textiles should be flexible and soft enough so that not to prevent a child from active movements. This discomfort will not make a little restless baby stay calm, however, it can jeopardize it because of the restriction of moves.
3. Give preference to zippers instead of buttons. First of all, it is more convenient. Second, there is no risk that a curious toddler will tear it off and swallow. One of the most important rules is to take all the measures to prevent a child from the risk of choking. Perception of the world through taking objects in the mouth is natural for children up to 24 months or even more. That is why care cannot be excessive in this regard.

All in all, clothes should not only ensure that a baby is warm and protected against weather impacts but also create no discomfort or endanger a child. Finding a reliable vendor of outfits for children can eliminate the problem with the quality of fabrics and all the materials used. Be careful and stay on the safe side.
