The Music of the Spheres

The woman on the radio who was lodging the old complaint that her husband never listens to her reminded me of the music of the spheres, that chord of seven notes, one for each of the visible planets, which has been sounding since the beginning of the universe, and which we can never hear, according to Pythagoras because we hear it all the time so it sounds the same as silence. But let's say the needle were lifted from the spinning grooves of those celestial orbsthen people would stop on the street and look up, and others would stop in the fields and hikers would stop in the woods and look this way and that as if they were hearing something for the first time. and that husband would lower the newspaper from his face look at his wife who has been standing in the doorway and ask Did you just say something, dear?
